As of late, I've begun taking a far more anti-religious attitude. While previously I was generally somewhat agnostic to deist, I have not been personally hostile to religious attitudes unless they were subversive. In the iFunny sphere, I've now become a notable member of "pagang" amongst the Xtians on the app as I've begun posting more images of non-Christian imagery. Although I generally respect my ancestral folk religion, and will often defend it, I don't subscribe to it. Regardless, the lower caste of xtians still see anything outside their theology as "pagan" or "satanic."

I won't go so far as to say this is characteristic of Xtians as a whole. The simple fact is that Christianity is the normie religion. Anyone who isn't agnostic/atheist will tend towards Christianity. Paganism, occultism, and the old philosophical traditions generally take a higher caste of man to join simply because one has to search them out & put considerable effort into researching them. Unlike Christianity, these belief systems are not easily accessible. There are several intelligent Xtians, but they often get diluted into the mass of majority brown retards.

Regardless, I highly recommend Gildhelm's recent article HERE.

I found it very interesting, but also starkly familiar. It seems that Haeckel's Monism is more or less identical to what I described as Animism in my previous commentaries, albeit more so interconnected. Further, the things that influenced his views are virtually identical to those that influenced my own. Although I was roughly aware of Goethe's Natural Philosophy, this is the first time I've read about Haeckel & will be delving deeper in the future.

As stated before, I found striking similarities between Haecker & my own views, so I won't repeat what was said in the linked article. Read it!

Anyways, being on the wrong side of xtians' ire is new to me & quite revealing. For one, many xtians are strikingly schizophrenic in their beliefs. I see this often in the comments of my own posts, where subscribers can be observed agreeing with things that are entirely hostile to their faith. Another striking example is an individual that complained about Hitler being responsible for the deaths of so many Whites during WWII, and yet elsewhere praised Charlemagne & defended his borderline genocidal massacres of Europeans during his rule.

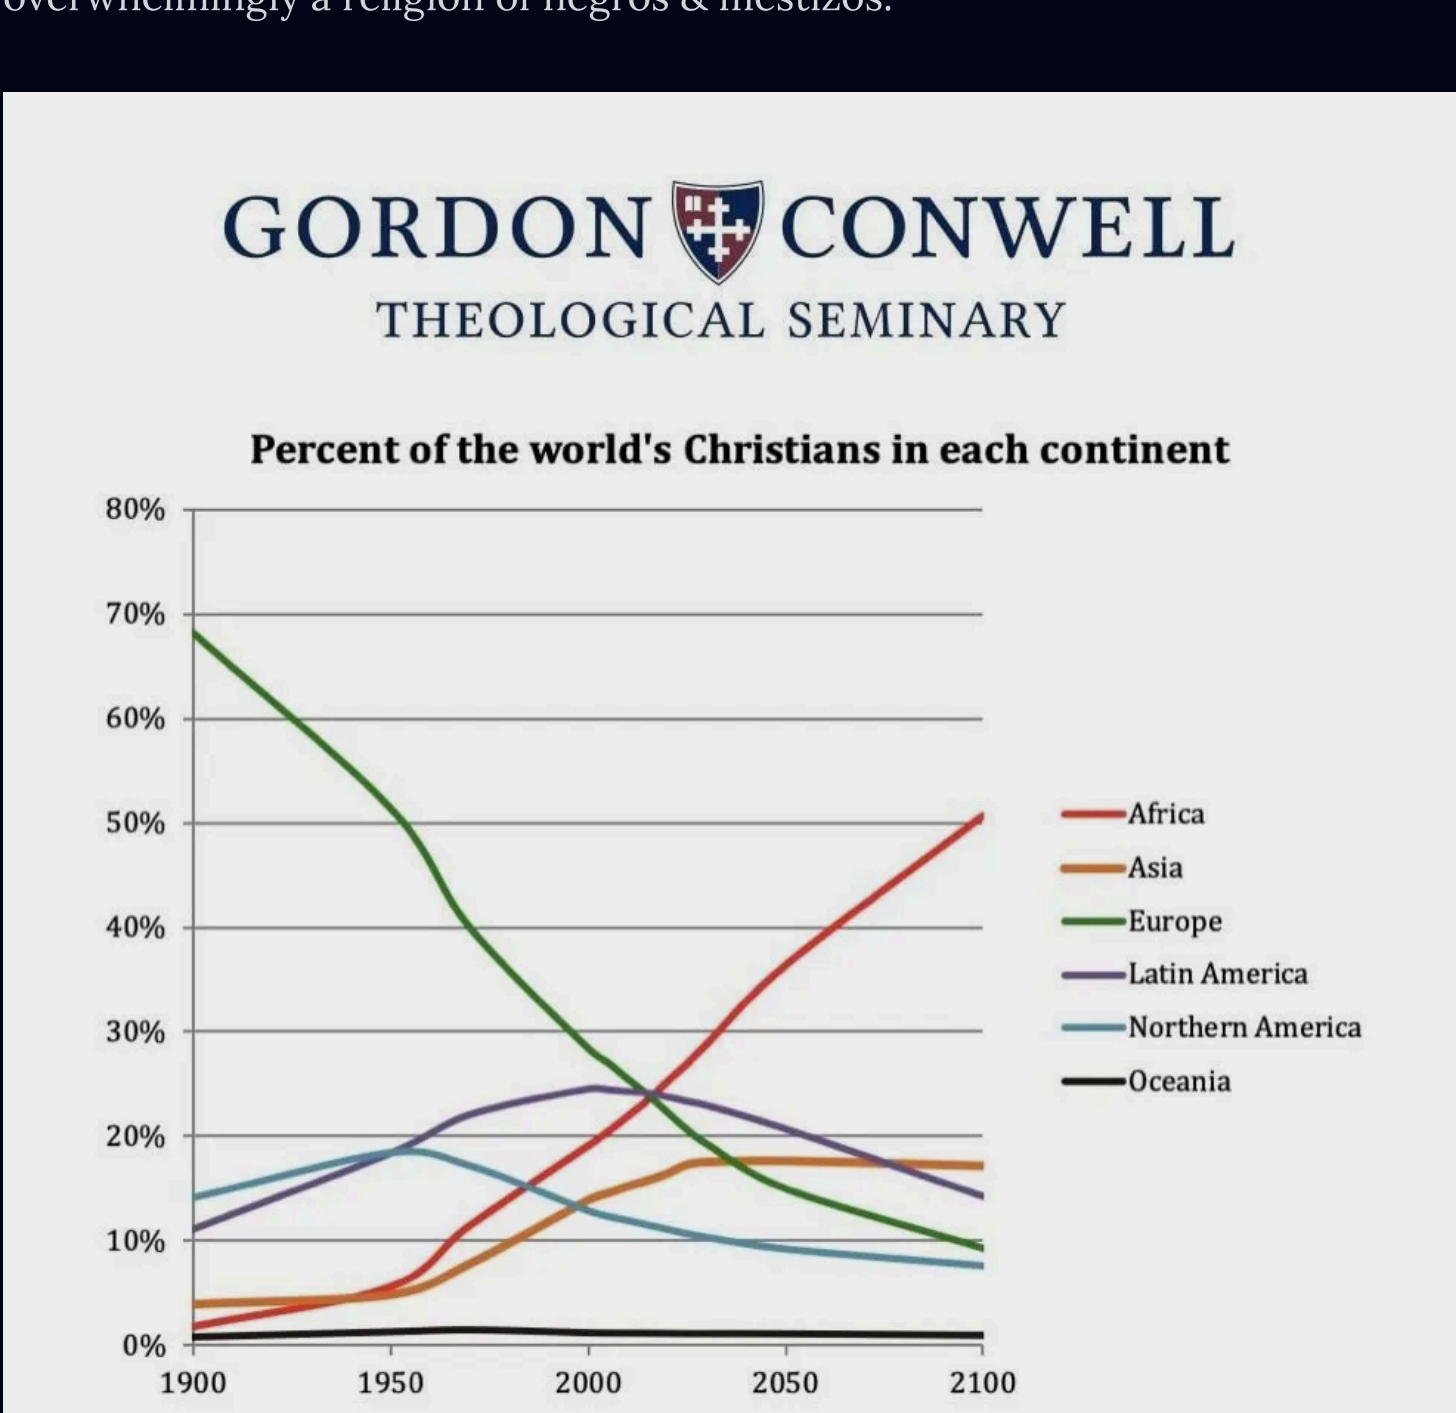

Once you leave the xtian mentality & gain an outside view, the reasoning becomes quite obvious. Xtianity is an ideology in itself, requiring just as much "faith" as Marxism. Just as the internationalist Communist will always see his kin as being other Communists, so too will xtians. So when xtians form positions like the one mentioned above, it shows that their "nation" falls into their faith. They are xtians before they are German or English.

The schizophrenia sets in when these people start to adopt racist beliefs. While they will sometimes try to adopt positions like "Whites are yahweh's chosen" or that Jesus was White, none of it actually fits into Xtian theology or history. This was all just invented by the Christian Identity crowd to justify their schizophrenia in the 80's, stemming from the NSDAP's "Positive Christianity" which was really meant to gradually kill off the religion. Anyone who isn't retarded will know that all the original Xtians, including Jesus himself, were Semitic Jews & Xtian morality bleeds with judaic belief.

Witnessing this schizophrenia play out has become a pastime of mine. The best is with the "le based tradcath" groyper crowd on Xtwitter.

The old question of "White pagan or brown christian Europe" also continues to expose many xtians as being at least passively anti-White at their core. When you push many of them hard enough they will begin openly identifying themselves more with Semites than their own ancestors & kin, and show a latent & rabid anti-White sentiment. Quite comical.

Another interesting observation is that Xtians are not coping well with the fact their religion is dying in the West. I've seen some cognitive dissonance where they simply deny this being true, but numbers don't lie. Xtianity is overwhelmingly a religion of negros & mestizos.

Whites of the world have overwhelmingly left xtianity to the history books, moving towards a secular society. This is especially true for NWE, as many of the religious strongholds of Europe are Slavs & specifically Poles.

Many may decry this, seeing it as an indication of the spread of degeneracy. I don't, the only 'degeneracy' xtianity ever stood against was homosexuality & being a whore. The more egregious examples of degeneracy like miscegenation & general slave morality have either been met with indifference or outright support by the Church. Regardless, religion isn't needed to justify stands against either of those things as science provides more than enough real evidence that they're wrong.

Rather, the push towards secularism is beneficial as it will pave the way for a spirituality more conducive to both science & the volk. Something that reiterates values previously held by our pre-Christian ancestors. The only thing standing in the way of this is modern Liberalism, with Xtianity being a secondary enemy that only holds influence in the aging boomer neocons & the mestizo pseudo-RW.

If my anecdotal experience is indicative of anything grander, the future of RW spirituality will likely be based on Nietzsche. I am a big fan of the great German Incel, so this would be a good thing that paves the way for even better things. But again, purely based off anecdotal experience.

Regardless, most people with an at least triple digit IQ have shown great resistance towards any invented religion. If we can put a definite start date for a religion, and trace it's origins, it takes away the charm of it. The fact that modern archaeology & such has managed to do this to Xtianity is probably a big reason for why people are apostatizing en masse. The only sort of spirituality that will take hold going forward will necessarily be based on real world observations (via physics, theoretical mathematics, biology, chemistry, etc.) and perhaps some Platonic perception of 'God(s)'.

As it turns out, the people who refer to the "Universe/Cosmos" in lieu of any specific deity were right.

I've recently started reading the writings of Anton Holzner who was Catholic priest who left the priesthood to join the SS in a collection called Gottgläubig - might be of interest to you.
